THE DIRTY HEADS-ANY PORT IS A STORM: The Dirty Heads comfortably combine hip-hop and reggae with rock songwriting and arrangements on Any Port in a Storm. While those are the three main styles the group blend, some tracks coming close to being straight hip-hop, reggae, and/or rock. Jimi Hendrix and Stevie Ray Vaughan are even referenced in 'Believe.' It's an unusual mixture, but more clever than exciting, without standout tunes or lyrics.

SQUEEZE-SPOT THE DIFFERENCE: As befits one of the UK's much-loved acts, Squeeze influences can be found in many current acts, whether it be Mark Ronson, Kasabian, Supergrass, Lily Allen, The Feeling or Razorlight. With their fingerprints keenly felt throughout the fabric of popular music, it is only right that these songs, with their evergreen and popular sound, continue to be played and enjoyed live.

Available August 3, 2010

BUCKCHERRY-ALL NIGHT LONG: Their fifth album is the vital sound of rock and roll endurance at its very best. More than a decade after first establishing its good name with the popular eponymous 1999 debut effort, Buckcherry has created the band's most eclectic and impressive effort yet. All Night Long is a thoroughly rocking song cycle in the tradition of Aerosmith, AC/DC and Kiss.

CLUTCH-FROM BEALE ST DELUXE EDITION: Digitally remastered and expanded two CD edition of this 2007 album, considered one of the fiercest, catchiest and overall best sounding Blues Rock releases of our generation. Visual digital enhancement was just the beginning: the band also added nine Memphis-blues influenced performances from the planet's far reaches.

DRU HILL-INDRUPENDENCE DAY: SisQo, Nokio, Jazz, and new member Tao (pronounced Tay-oh) realize that together they equal the perfect blend of soulful R&B, Rock, Hip-Hop, and Romance. This ultra talented foursome is armed to take the world by storm with sold-out tours and the release of their fourth album Indrupendence Day which harbored the first single, LOVE M.D., a sexy mid-tempo ballad.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

NO CHECKS ON LTD

In last week's EW (7/22), the article on LTD's response to the claims of an EmX-critical flyer says "the information ... is less than accurate .... [and] creates fear ... anxiety and anger."

Spokesman Andy Vobora then says LTD's Gateway path in Springfield was "enhanced" by paving and lighting — by suddenly taking out 58 trees and paving over the grass.

LTD touts "negotiations" with business property owners, but I've talked with several of them on 11th who've never heard anything from LTD. They talk about maintaining driveway access, but you can only do that by not building the concrete EmX lanes or by widening West 11th by 24 feet, destroying 12 feet of parking or buildings right on the sidewalk already, or better, by not doing EmX on 11th at all.

LTD "seeks input" from people, but that does not mean they heed what citizens say. There are no checks on LTD except the City Council. LTD board members are appointed by the governor. LTD gets tax money from businesses with no representation on their part. They're after the federal dollars to further build the LTD empire to serve 5 percent of the population.

LTD is less than accurate and spreading fear, anxiety and anger.

NO POO REQUIRED

Regarding Camilla Mortensen's article "Biomess" (7/22), I am an expert on anaerobic digestion and biogas. There are more than 50 million households in China using clean-burning, carbon-neutral biogas, and the torch at the 2008 Beijing Olympics was fueled with biogas from the city wastewater system. Hundreds of cities in Europe, primarily Sweden, run their entire transit bus fleets off biogas. And for all you pot-smoking technophobes, the ancient Assyrians used biogas to heat their baths in 3,000 BC. The micro-organisms we use to make biogas are among the oldest life forms on earth.

Biogas is different from biomass burning in a number of important ways — none of which Lane County officials are aware of with their ill-conceived Junction City bioenergy park or Short Mountain Landfill projects. Most importantly, burning biomass leaves unusable ash, but the biogas process produces high-quality, nitrogen-rich fertilizer that can be used to replace chemical fertilizers and soil amendments. Compost does not retain nitrogen, and unlike compost, biogas slurry is a liquid and can be applied on a farm scale with existing farm equipment.

The biogas process does not require "poo" as Mortensen indicates; all organic matter contains methanogenic micro-organisms to generate biogas. The most gas of all per ton is generated from ordinary grass clippings — yes, you could easily run your lawnmower with the grass clippings you cut. Unlike forest biomass, biogas is self-regulating by the availability of wet waste, which occurs only in cities and farms.

MORE THAN DEBRIS

I'm glad the Weekly finally covered the burning issue of forest incineration ("Biomass," 7/22). Why did EW wait until after Seneca got its permit to pollute our air?

Seneca states they will burn 280

VIEWPOINT

BY KATY CROSSLIN

Caught in the Flytrap

Downtown exclusion zone is unjustified and unconstitutional

The U.S. Constitution provides that everyone has the right to speak his or her mind and assemble with others in public places such as public parks and sidewalks. According to the U.S. Supreme Court, sidewalks and downtown common areas are considered quintessential public forums deserving of the maximum constitutional protections. The Constitution does not discern between rich or poor, young or old, homeowners or houseless citizens. Apparently the city of Eugene and the Eugene Police Department are not well versed with these tenets of our democracy and have been utilizing their powers to unconstitutionally harass the poor, the young, and houseless people living in our fair city in order to protect "the right to shop and consume" without being forced to set eyes on how the other half lives.

Before the Downtown Public Safety Zone (DPSZ) was passed, many of its supporters claimed that crime rates were on the rise. But, according to statistics on the EPD's website, property crime dropped 15 percent in 2007, violent crime dropped 16 percent and behavior crimes dropped 3 percent — so what precipitated this community need?

Prior to implementation of this exclusion zone, a Downtown Public Safety Task Team was created to attempt to justify this unwarranted program. The team, made up primarily of downtown retailers, admitted it wanted to create programs and incentives to encourage the homeless to go to other parts of town by giving them coupons for places outside of the downtown exclusion zone. The Civil Liberties Defense Center believes that the language used by the "team" makes it clear that many people are not welcome downtown at all, that they are profiling people in order to decide who should be excluded from public spaces downtown and are attempting to push the issues of homelessness, mental illness and other community concerns onto other neighborhoods. The team gave some lip-service about providing "services" to these communities, but other than witnessing cops and private security guards harassing and using our tax dollars to thrust expensive tickets on penniless people, we haven't seen much in the way of "service."

In 2008 the Eugene City Council adopted Ordinance #20419, which defined a Downtown Public Safety Zone and enacted conditions under which the Eugene Municipal Court could exclude a person from the zone. Five out of eight City Council members approved of it, including Andrea Ortiz, Mike Clark, Chris Pryor and Jennifer Solomon. Councilors Betty Taylor, Alan Zelenka, and Bonny Bettman McCornack were the only three who opposed the ordinance. The ordinance states that any person who is simply accused of one of many minor (and often ambiguous) offenses listed below can be excluded from the DPSZ for 90 days. If a person is later convicted of committing one of a larger list of offenses in the downtown area, she or he can be excluded for a year. Since most of the folks appearing before the municipal judge don't have lawyers and don't understand what is happening to them, it's simply a matter of the prosecutor asking for the exclusion and the judge granting it because no one is there to fight it.

If the city of Eugene were to make its statistics regarding the DPSZ public, we'd find that the vast majority of people targeted for prosecution are indigent and/or youth — both of whom have very little access to lawyers or legal information. In the case of the DPSZ, you are not entitled to a court appointed attorney to assist you in fighting an exclusion that forbids you from utilizing the public bus station, FOOD for Lane County kitchen and many other public services. And of course, once you are in this flytrap, each time you are spotted walking the public sidewalk within the "zone" you are prosecuted again, and your exclusion is continued for another year. What next? Free bus fare to Springfield for Eugene's undesirables?

Recently a city worker, at the direction of a police officer, painted a white border around nearly the entire perimeter of the city block that surrounds the LTD bus station. In the white border are the words, "DO NOT BLOCK PUBLIC RIGHT OF WAY." According to police, the sidewalk that surrounds the LTD bus station is notorious for having large crowds of people that often linger to chat with friends or wait for a bus. The EPD claims that they have received complaints from a handicapped citizen and others that there were too many people blocking the sidewalks and not allowing pedestrians to get through. The painting of the sidewalk cost the city $300. The EPD claims that people are allowed to linger within the box, but if a pedestrian asks to pass through, then they must be allowed passage. If a person blocks a public right of way, they can get a $280 ticket. Carol Berg-Caldwell, a Eugene activist, said she visited the box not long after the paint dried and received distressing news from teens. She said that the teens were told by cops that if they merely stepped over the line, they would get a ticket. There is no legal basis for such a threat, and thus the police attempt to chill the lawful rights of citizens violates clearly established constitutional rights. Police are required to protect the constitutional rights of all citizens, not act like bullies toward marginalized individuals.

EPD keeps a database of who is not allowed within the downtown zone (a "watch list" of transients). There is a complex procedure for an excluded person to obtain what is called a "variance," which allows that person to enter the downtown area for crucial and basic needs only, and they must carry the variance documents on them while in the exclusion zone.

The vast majority of people targeted for prosecution are indigent and/or youth — both of whom have very little access to lawyers or legal information.

Portland tried an exclusion ordinance as well but eliminated it based upon serious concerns of police profiling. Whether Portland or Eugene, these exclusions are repugnant violations of peoples' civil rights and liberties and are an ineffective waste of taxpayer resources.

Based upon crime statistics, there is no need for this illegal profiling program. Instead of harassing homeless people, we could use the money to offer programs, counseling, and nonreligious shelter. The exclusion ordinance only displaces the problem of homelessness and crime and attempts to legitimize police profiling based upon class, appearance and lifestyle.

The exclusion zone includes 20 square blocks of downtown, from 7th to 11th Avenues and from Pearl to Lincoln streets. Lane County Courthouse is not included. The zone also extends to Lawrence Street between 7th and 8th Avenues.

The ordinance is scheduled to expire Aug. 11, and the council is set to vote August 9 on whether the exclusion zone should be continued. Raise your voice and be heard on this important community issue! If you feel that you have been unconstitutionally targeted or harassed in the DPSZ or white sidewalk boxes, contact the Civil Liberties Defense Center at 687-9180.

Katy Crosslin is a senior at the UO and an intern at the Civil Liberties Defense Center. Her major is environmental studies, and she has "recently become passionate about law which is why I'm interning at the CLDC."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

thousand tons of trees per year in their incinerator (it's not a "plant," it will burn lots of plants). Seneca owns 165 thousand acres of tree farms (which they clearcut and helicopter spray with 2,4-D, aka Agent Orange). Therefore, they need 1.7 tons per acre per year. This is roughly the growth rate of "marginal forest" under Oregon state law, so the incinerator will need much more than discarded branches and mill trimmings.

Three people profiled in the article spoke at the "Clearcutting the Climate" conference in January 2008 — Mark Harmon, Samantha Chirillo and Doug Heiken. I was a co-organizer of that event and gave a presentation on "Peak Forests."

The forest activists against this new motive for deforestation are generally volunteers not dependent on foundation grants. Oregon Toxics Alliance was the only foundation-funded group that objected to the Seneca incinerator, but they're focused on pollution, not deforestation. Heiken's Oregon Wild is promoting Sen. Wyden's awful logging bill to accelerate deforestation on public lands in Eastern Oregon, even though Heiken's presentation at "Clearcutting the Climate" noted that logging increases carbon pollution. It is greenwashing to call logging "carbon neutral."

One reason timber barons want to burn trees for electricity: They've lost their market for building condos in the desert.

EDITOR'S NOTE: We did run numerous news stories, op-eds and letters against the plant. We editorialized repeatedly against its construction and urged LRAPA to deny a permit. Search our archives for "Seneca biomass."

SIDEWALK DRAMA

In front of the downtown library, I witnessed an interaction that disturbed me. A man was walking by while another man and a young girl unlocked their bikes. Hearing the bikes make a noise, the walker stopped and turned around to look. The biker immediately responded with a loud, threatening command to "Keep on walking," and observed, "You got problems." Insulted, the walking man questioned the aggression. The bicyclist then assumed an aggressive posture, and kept repeating his two phrases louder and more forcefully. After a few more seconds of verbal escalation, I intervened to defuse the situation. This conflict could have become violent.

Why did this happen? The biker felt threatened by the walker's "street person" appearance (none of the walker's words or actions were threatening) and went into protect-the-child mode: He felt the need to control the situation (i.e. give orders, be obeyed) and was frustrated by his inability to do so.

I suggest anyone similarly intolerant should stay away from all public areas (downtown, parks, sidewalks) lest they lose control and assault innocent people who have the "wrong" look.

A POSITIVE REVIEW?

Every spring my wife and I go to Ashland. When I read your review (7/15) of Ruined, which we'd seen, I was surprised to find myself cringing. I realized I was prepared for the cynicism of a Weekly movie review ... but this was positive!

Certainly, writing a movie review as if it were for a film history class is in line with your sister publications in Portland and Seattle, but what if your readers are capable of something more?

At one time, shouting "Fire!" in a crowded theater was a rationale for censorship, but I don't believe it's true today. People would just look around for themselves. We are not cattle.

Here's another example: 1984 never happened. If a cop abuses someone on the streets, a dozen people film him with their cell phones. We are not slaves.

Truly, you only give high marks when the movie itself is cynical. But your readers continue to fall in love, have children, laugh and be productive. We are not zombies.

Cynicism in a news article can inspire us to action, but cynicism in a movie review just makes us cringe. The Ashland reviews prove what's possible; we're ready for you to be enlightened about that.

his brand of Judeo-Christian mysticism is popular and has been revered by erudite persons for a long time; therefore, it is rational to believe that it is more than a myth. Unfortunately for this feeble argument, appealing to popularity and to antiquity are two distinct informal logical fallacies.

If the mystic is trying to establish that faith is rational, he will need to appeal to reason instead of irrelevancies, and he will need to contend with the definition of faith: irrational belief. Arguing for the rationality of faith is a contradiction in terms; the mystic's argument is therefore rendered unsound and invalid.

If Keene would take a little time to understand what atheism actually is, instead of relying on presupposed stereotypes, he could easily see that there is a great deal of wonder through the spectacles of reason and science. Seeing something that we are unable to explain is the engine of wonderment that drives science; if we could explain everything, science simply would not be. Keen's mysticism is, for me, too subjective and at odds with observable reality.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A POSITIVE REVIEW?

Every spring my wife and I go to Ashland. When I read your review (7/15) of Ruined, which we'd seen, I was surprised to find myself cringing. I realized I was prepared for the cynicism of a Weekly movie review ... but this was positive!

Certainly, writing a movie review as if it were for a film history class is in line with your sister publications in Portland and Seattle, but what if your readers are capable of something more?

At one time, shouting "Fire!" in a crowded theater was a rationale for censorship, but I don't believe it's true today. People would just look around for themselves. We are not cattle.

Here's another example: 1984 never happened. If a cop abuses someone on the streets, a dozen people film him with their cell phones. We are not slaves.

Truly, you only give high marks when the movie itself is cynical. But your readers continue to fall in love, have children, laugh and be productive. We are not zombies.

Cynicism in a news article can inspire us to action, but cynicism in a movie review just makes us cringe. The Ashland reviews prove what's possible; we're ready for you to be enlightened about that.

BIKES GET ONLY 2% OF TRANSPORTATION BUCKS

For decades local plans have called for encouraging green and alternative transportation. But when it comes to actually spending money, bikes get very little.

The region will spend $270 million on transportation projects in the next three years, with only 2.2 percent of the money going for bicycle/pedestrian projects, according to a Metropolitan Transportation Improvement Program (MTIP) plan slated for approval next month.

At the July 12 meeting of the Metropolitan Policy Committee (MPC), LCOG planner Paul Thompson sought to justify choosing to spend so much to encourage driving over biking. "Obviously those roadway preservation projects are a lot more expensive than the bike/ped projects, but you get more in a bike/ped project," Thompson said.

No one at the MPC, which includes elected officials from Eugene, Springfield and Lane County, commented on the apparent illogic of that argument. Cyclists have long pointed out that the relative low cost of bike projects per person moved is a reason to spend more money on cycling, not less.

The huge polluting highway projects that LCOG and the MPC favor dwarf the tiny bike projects. The largest bike projects in the MTIP are a $2 million project to extend the riverfront bike path under Beltline and $2 million for a new riverfront bike path near Dorris Ranch. By comparison, the plan includes continued spending on a $202 million project to add a lane to the I-5 bridge over the Willamette. The plan also includes continued work on $150 million in construction to overhaul the I-5 Beltline interchange to fuel urban sprawl.

Thompson attacked criticism of the I-5 Beltline project from environmentalists in a memo to the MPC. "For the past 10 years, I-5 at Beltline Highway has been consistently identified as this region's top transportation priority."

However, the region's top transportation priority is not promoting freeway sprawl but decreasing car use, as stated in the regional TransPlan adopted by local officials after years of debate, study and public involvement. TransPlan explicitly calls for a system that "will reduce reliance on the auto" and "give funding priority (ideally within the first three to five years after adoption of TransPlan subject to available funding) to stand-alone bikeway projects." — Alan Pittman

STRAYS NO LONGER GET A RIDE

Cuts in the city of Eugene budget have cost Lane County Animal Services (LCAS) its ability to pick up strays.

"We lost an officer, so that's a service we are no longer able to provide," says Tom Howard, director of LCAS.

Previously when LCAS received a report of a stray dog or cat it was usually able to collect the animal and bring it to the county kennels, hopefully to reunite with its owner. But a reduction of one of its 3.5 officers means that LCAS is able to offer fewer services.

"We have to triage our calls and respond to the ones that are most important," Howard says. He ticks off priorities that officers must respond to before strays: animal bites, abuse, neglect, injuries and dogs in cars or traffic.

Howard says that it's too early to say what kind of impact the loss of stray pickup will have on Eugene's wayward animal population, but he hopes that the public will continue to bring strays to LCAS at 3970 W. 1st Ave.

Stray pets run the risk of going hungry, getting hit by cars, and being hurt by vicious animals or people, according to the LCAS website.

Even though Howard urges the community to bring in strays, he cautions against contact with animals that display unfriendly behaviors. "If the dog or cat is aggressive, do not approach it," Howard says. "We will come out for an aggressive dog."

At the same time that the city of Eugene approved the budget that eliminated one LCAS animal control officer, Lane County approved its own budget, which added an animal behavior and training coordinator.

Kylie Belachaikovsky, LCAS volunteer and community outreach coordinator, says that budget cuts make the new position imperative because it will minimize the time pets are in LCAS care. "The behaviorist is going to get animals ready for adoption, keep them adoptable, and make sure they stay in their new adopted homes by offering support to adopters," Belachaikovsky says.

During the 2010 fiscal year, LCAS responded to 6,642 calls and impounded 1,336 dogs and 679 cats. Between returning pets to their humans, adoptions and transfers, it was able to maintain a 94 percent overall live release rate. — Shannon Finnell

KENNEDY QUESTIONS ORTHODOXY

Robert F. Kennedy Jr., one of the nation's leading environmental lawyers, spoke to a near capacity crowd at the historic McDonald Theatre in Eugene July 22 (see earlier story 7/15). His speech on "Our Environmental Destiny" was a mixture of anecdote and argument, and at one point he took a stab at the quality of American journalism saying that, "we have become the best entertained nation on Earth."

Kennedy argued against the prevailing view that ecology and capitalism are fundamentally opposed to one another. He gave several examples of how countries such as Costa Rica have decarbonized and have experienced a sustained period of economic growth. He said the free market rewards efficiency, and pollution is inefficient.

Kennedy repeated a warning about the prevailing control that corporations have in our economy and political institutions. He attempted to reframe how we define the free market in our society, calling the current system "crony capitalism," and "corporatism." He stopped short of blaming capitalism, saying it was "a tool, like a hammer. You can build with it, or you can destroy with it."

His view of the free market, he said, is that it should promote environmental sustainability and economic growth. The orthodox view serves the interests of a narrow few. Kennedy said corruption of the free market is caused by government subsidies to inefficient industries, and the deregulation of the "commons," our public lands, air, water, etc. This causes market distortions that allow corporations to use our natural resources in manner that benefits the few at the expense of the many. — Philip Shackleton

NEXT BIG THING IS BACK

Eugene Weekly's popular Next Big Thing music contest is up and running and already has 11 songs posted online, "and they are good ones," says Bill Shreve, EW's director of sales and marketing who is overseeing the contest again this year. "We're outpacing last year."

The contest is intended to give local bands and musicians who are not already under contract an opportunity to showcase their best original single songs. The songs are posted at <http://nextbigthingeugene.com> along with photos and blurbs about the musicians. Readers can listen to the songs, comment and vote. The contest wraps up Sept. 15 when the top 40 vote-getters are submitted to a panel of judges. The judges are made up of people in the local music industry with a few EW readers tossed in.

"The judges can also look at songs not in the top 40," says Shreve. "We want the judges engaged in the process from the start." Each judge will submit a paragraph or two about what they will be looking for in a commercially successful song.

All genres of music are invited to compete, says Shreve. "If someone writes a great piece in the classical genre we want to hear it."

The top 16 songs will go on a CD that will be distributed widely around Lane County. Musicians will be paid royalties on CD sales. The top four songs will be showcased live at the Best of Eugene Awards Show at WOW Hall Nov. 5, and the winner will be announced that night. The top four can also expect invitations to perform paid gigs around town.

Last year was the first year for the Next Big Thing and the contest ended with 150 songs, 25,000 visits to the website, and more than 8,000 unique visitors, says James Bateman, EW's webmaster who is overseeing the technical side of the contest.

Last year's winner was the band John Giovanni with its song "Slumber." Despite, or perhaps because of its new-found fame, John Giovanni broke up and vocalist Genevieve Bellemare and composer Eric Valentine went on to perform in the popular jazz quartet Voodoun Moi.

The cost of entering the contest is $20 per song. A CD, digital photo and blurb about the band or musicians can be dropped off at the EW offices, 1251 Lincoln St. — Ted Taylor

• Is LTD on the wrong track in its EmX bus rapid transit planning? We wrote in News Briefs last week about the flyer that's circulating around town, stuck on car windshields, saying that LTD is wasting taxpayer money designing and building rapid transit routes when it should be spending on its shrinking bus routes. LTD funding is complex, but in a nutshell the regular bus routes are supported by riders and by payroll taxes paid by employers. The level of service we experience rises and falls with the economy and right now it's down. But the funding for EmX comes from federal and sometimes state grants, and Lane County has the good fortune to be chosen for a pilot project. If EmX proves to be successful, it can serve as a model for other metro areas our size. Other benefits: The West Eugene Extension will help relieve congestion on West 11th; EmX buses carry more people more cheaply and cleanly per mile than regular buses; establishing rapid transit routes now is cheaper and easier than it will be in 20 or 50 years; and the routes are designed to be converted to light rail or whatever new transportation technology comes along. We could turn down the federal grants, but then they would just go to Spokane or some other city eager for transportation help. Why are we (even some progressives) fighting mass transit in Eugene and not embracing it enthusiastically? The details are certainly worth debating and challenging, but the big picture is clear. This is the direction we must go.

• Makes us proud. We hear this week that two South Eugene High Ultimate Frisbee athletes have been invited to represent the U.S. at the World Junior Ultimate Championships in Heilbronn, Germany in early August. Dylan Freechild, 19, and Aaron Honn, 17, will be joining 41 other young men and women from high schools and colleges around the nation. The U.S. team, all under age 21, will compete against 22 teams from around the world. The team is "the best that U.S. Ultimate has to offer," says girls' head coach John Sandhal. More than 500 players applied to be on the team. See more at the USA Ultimate website, <http://wkly.ws/ov>

• Art Robinson is running against Congressman Peter DeFazio in the November elections and Robinson appears to be running a cynical, even unethical campaign. He's demanded debate times and dates that he knows conflict with DeFazio's schedule, and the latest scandalous behavior is this past weekend's automated telephone "push-poll." We got one of these calls and it started off fair enough, asking us who we favored in the race. It then devolved into questions on the order of, "Would you still vote for DeFazio if you knew he tortured kittens and plans to take your guns away?" The questions were almost that absurd.

• We hear the Network Charter School is in negotiations for a privately owned downtown building, not the empty city-owned four-story building on Pearl that the school tried so hard to negotiate last spring. If the new deal goes through the building will need months of extensive upgrading. The school will have a temporary home in the fall, thanks to the generosity of Pastor Dan Bryant and the congregation at First Christian Church. Network Charter is an important part of our 4J education system and its 120 kids inject a lot of life into downtown. Let's support it in every way we can.

• Yet another report that Oregon's new junior Sen. Jeff Merkley is doing a stellar job comes in the July 26 issue of The New Yorker magazine. John Cassidy's story on Paul Volcker and his battles over the financial reform bill tells that Merkley and Carl Levin were Volcker's two closest allies on the Hill. We also hear that Merkley has been in the right place for an energy bill in the miserable Senate. Remember Gordon Smith, replaced by Merkley in 2008? He was moderate by today's standards, but it's good for the state and the country that a smart, courageous, progressive Oregonian has taken his seat in the Senate.

• We missed last weekend's opening of The Boys From Syracuse at the Oregon Festival of American Music, but performing arts editor Suzi Steffen did make it to a Kiss Me, Kate rehearsal. She was happy to watch Eugene Ballet dancers, local theater lights like the redoubtable Bill Hulings and Shirley Andress and a group full of energetic dancers, singers and actors. Kate opens Friday, July 30, at the Hult, and Syracuse also plays for two more weekends at the Shedd as OFAM continues with a wide variety of musical options (see Brett Campbell's column about it at <http://wkly.ws/p4>).

Comet has been at LCAS since March, and he MUST be adopted very soon. Volunteers have been taking him on "field trips" for advanced training, and to keep his spirits up. As you can see, he loves to go for rides, but the ride he really needs is out of the shelter and into a forever home. Comet is very large and strong, but has a heart of gold. Thank you for saving a life when you Opt to Adopt from LCAS!

If you saw the movie "Marley and Me", you know what to expect from Bradley. This gorgeous Yellow Lab is a big, boisterous goofball who still needs a little remedial training. With a little training and a LOT of exercise, this diamond in the rough will really shine! #1107-0150

Monkey is a fantastic little Chihuahua just waiting to meet you! He is not nervous or shy at all, and is very social with people and other dogs. This pint sized cutie has a great personality, and will bring you years of fun and unconditional love #1107-0132

Help! Jillian has been at LCAS the longest of them all! She has been waiting since April for a lucky break...sure, she isn't a cute tiny kitten or a flashy color, but please give her a second look and a second chance to win someone's heart at last. #1004-1689

Luke is a goofy, young Cattle Dog/Lab mix. He already knows basic obedience, and really just wants to please. He sometimes acts too silly because he is bored in the kennel. Take him on a nice walk and give him the chance to show you the "real" Luke, you won't be disappointed! #1006-2015

Manny: Oh boy! Manny is the nicest dog you will ever meet! He is a perfect Lab/Border Collie mix, and is 100% housetrained and perfectly mannered. He loves kids and other dogs and is patiently waiting in his foster home for a special family of his own. #1006-1872

Mad Eye Moody was born with a slight neurological condition. The left side of her face is a bit droopy, giving her a unique look. Other than that she is as normally healthy and active as her sisters. This one-of-a-kind kitten is looking for a new home now! #1107-0045

Bonnie nearly lost her eyes because of severe infections. Thanks to a caring foster home and round-the-clock care, she has survived AND has her full vision. What a lucky girl! Donations are especially needed now, during LCAS' busiest "kitten season". #1006-2029

Mickie and Minnie are two hilarious Doberman/Aussie/Chow mix puppies. They are smart, fun and have plenty of puppy energy to share with you! They are great with other dogs, but a little too rough with cats, and can be adopted together or separately.

going TO THE dogs (AND CATS)

Along with being a top bike city, a top hippie city and a Mecca for treehuggers, Eugene is a great city for animal lovers. The Bijou Cinema had its much-mourned Boo the cat; KMTR watchers still miss Helmsley the Weather Dog's cute outfits. EW has Tina Fey Fish, senior aquatics correspondent — an elderly blue betta we welcomed to our offices after her career in radio ended earlier this year — and it's not unusual for dogs to be sprawled under a reporter's desk, or for an office to be used as temporary quarters for a stray kitten.

Polls have shown that employees who can bring their dogs to work are willing to work longer hours, and studies say that pets reduce stress, lower cholesterol, reduce depression and even help with your marriage — couples with dogs report less tension in their relationships. So it's no wonder that, along with the rest of us, Lane County's celebrities have pets in their lives too. From rescued kitties to purebred hounds, politicians and musicians alike have their beastly companions to bring to the office or unwind with at home at the end of the day.

While RV manufacturers are going out of business, we hear that the pet-friendly market in Eugene is growing. Celebrities and the ordinary Eugeneans alike are willing to pay to keep our pets healthy and happy. Natures Pet Market on Willamette next to the Market of Choice (naturespetmarket.com/Eugene.html) has kitties for adoption along with healthy foods for sale, and Healing Paws Wellness Center (healingpawscenter.com) brings more homeopathic and acupuncture alternatives to town. Opportunity Barks in Pleasant Hill (www.opportunitybarks.com) brings another friendly boarding business to Lane County.

Civil liberties attorney Lauren Regan says her dog, Nakaia, "is a combination private body guard and empathetic stress reliever for clients and staff alike." Cartoonist Jan Eliot says when her popular comic strip about a single mom and her extended family was syndicated, "I hadn't had a dog in years, but working at home seemed to be the right situation for getting one." And Pixies founder Charles Thompson and wife Violet Clark sum it up when they say about their cat and dog, "Our hearts are bigger from having Willow and Pete in our lives."

Pixies founder Charles Thompson (Frank Black/Black Francis) and wife Violet Clark play together in the band Grand Duchy. Their cocker spaniel Willow was a Christmas gift to their son Julian, and their rescued cat, Pete, aka "Pointy Pete O'Sullivan Meow-Meow the Second," (who was camera shy,) was a birthday gift to daughter Lucy. Willow also goes by the "Big Willowski," though Clark and Thompson report neither pet has shown a propensity for bowling.

Mason Williams is probably as well known in Eugene for his annual Christmas concert as he is for his guitar instrumental "Classical Gas." Williams and Karen "Kitty Mother" Williams have two cats, Bob "Dusty Butts" Williams and Bob's chocolate point Siamese sidekick, Mimi. Williams says the moniker "Dusty Butts" comes not only from Bob's cowboy swagger but also from the Cat Code of the West, which says that no cats are supposed to get up on kitchen tables or countertops so that no cat butt dust can settle on the stuff around where the humans eat.

Mayor Kitty Piercy says her family calls their independent-minded 18-year-old cat Jax "a Greenhill special." She says, "We have always adopted our pets from Greenhill. We have a particular fondness for yellow cats." Jax sticks close to home and has a number of friends who drop by. Piercy says, "You can never tell whether he will be shy or really taken with someone. It just depends on his take of the person and his mood of the moment."

Lauren Regan, attorney, founder and executive director of the Civil Liberties Defense Center has taken her 14-year-old rescued husky-malamute mix, Nakai, to work with her every day since the dog was a 6-week-old pup. Regan says Nakai is sometimes called "Princess Fluffybutt" because she rules the entire building full of lawyers and is a very spoiled dogchild." She says Nakai "regularly appears with me at public speaking events and attempts to steal the show from time to time — she thinks the crowd is there to ooh and aah at her."

Eugene City Councilor Betty Taylor's golden retriever puppy Lucy turned 10 weeks old on July 26. She came to Taylor from Sunshine Golden Retrievers in Dexter, who have bred goldens for hunting, show dogs, therapy and search and rescue. Taylor says Lucy "is beautiful, sweet, but still a puppy."

Jan Eliot, who writes and illustrates the nationally syndicated cartoon "Stone Soup," says she got her 14-year-old schipperke Lily, aka "Stink Breath" — the basis for the dog called Biscuit in "Stone Soup" — during her first year of syndication. "When she was just a few months old, she escaped out the front door at six in the morning. It was rainy and still dark. She's all black; she just disappeared, and I had no idea how to get her back, and didn't want to yell because the neighbors were all asleep. Fortunately, she is addicted to food, and when I whispered 'Biscuit?' she popped up out of the shrubbery and ran to me." Sydney, a 10-year-old corgi, "hates car rides and walks prefers carpet and stuffed toys, and as many naps as possible. Preferably in full sun."

DOES THIS spay MAKE MY BUTT LOOK big?

*The real facts
on spay and neuter*

by Catherine Foss

"I want my kid to witness the miracle of (puppy, kitty, rabbit) birth." "Fido won't feel like a man without his balls." "I'll find all the puppies good homes." "I can't afford it."

Excuses abound for not having pets spayed or neutered, but animal shelters are overflowing and thousands of homeless animals are euthanized each year.

Both the Willamette Animal Guild (WAG) and the City of Eugene Spay & Neuter Clinic specialize in ensuring that all families can afford to have their pets spayed or neutered. And in addition to concerns about cost, they've heard all the other reasons why people might be wary about snipping Fido and spaying Fluffy.

One common misconception is that fixing your pet will change its personality and behavior. The fear is that a watchdog won't be a good protector, a hunting dog won't be driven to hunt or that the animal might become an altogether different pet. But Cathy Lacki from the city clinic explains: "It only changes behaviors we don't want in the first place." Males, she says, will be less likely to roam and be aggressive because of females in heat. And for females, aside from the danger of roaming while in heat, she says that even a single litter can be dangerous. "One heat cycle increases their chance of getting mammary cancer," she says, and giving birth is riskier for a cat or dog than getting spayed. She is adamant that dogs can still be trained to become hunters or watchdogs after being fixed.

Another frequent worry is that pets will grow fat or lazy after being fixed. Kathy Ford from WAG says that yes, "the metabolism of both the cats and the dogs will slow down." But the benefits to the animals outweigh the weight gain. Also, Lacki adds that if you overfeed your animals and don't exercise them, then they will definitely gain weight, so it's up to the owner to step in and prevent this.

Any animal over four months old can be spayed or neutered at the city clinic — some rescues even do the operation as early as six weeks after birth — and the procedure can be done within a day. Lacki explains that the customer simply makes an appointment and then brings the animal in between 7:30 and 8 am. The veterinarian examines the animal while the owner is there, and the surgeries generally are finished by noon. The pets have a couple of hours to recover while the staff can monitor them, and then can be picked up between 2 and 5 pm.

The prices at both clinics are low, and at the city clinic, low-income residents can apply for a voucher to cut costs — $20 for male cats, $30 for female cats, $60 for dogs. The funding for the voucher program comes from dog license revenue from Eugene pet owners.

Additionally, WAG offers a special package for feral cats: $40 for spay/neuter, vaccines and flea treatment. "We came from a rescue background," Ford explains. "There are a lot of cats that are free-roaming; they've been dumped." You can recognize fixed feral cats because their ears have been "tipped" — the top quarter inch is removed while they are anesthetized. The hope is that while these cats may never be adopted, at least they will live a disease-free life and not have numerous litters.

t's summer again, and everybody is ready to throw their mundane lives aside for some time out. For many, this break takes the form of a weekend camping trip to an overly commercialized — but nevertheless pretty — hosted campground; for others, ridiculous tourist traps like California and Cancun seem to be the only options. But if everybody and their dog decide to go on vacation, what actually happens to the dogs? What about the cats, birds, iguanas and all the other weird creatures that people like to detain and keep as friends? When we humans decide to spend a few days throwing all sorts of money into relaxation, what exactly are we to do with our pets?

Many Eugene pet owners seem to choose the outdoorsy options (camping, backpacking, etc.) because these are pet friendly ways to take time and relax. You can bring your pooch camping most places in Oregon, but national parks such as Crater Lake have restrictions on pets and do not allow them on trails.

For those who are not the outdoor type (but for some reason feel that bringing their pet along on vacation is an absolute must), there are an abundance of Oregon establishments that cater to the canine and other furry clientele. This ranges from inns and hotels to vacation rentals and resorts. If these places don't cater to pets, one response that has worked for some is stuffing your little friends into a backpack and sneaking

'em in Trojan-horse style. Disclaimer one: This may not work with small yappy dogs. Disclaimer two: We're not suggesting you do this, just that it happens sometimes.

Now, for those who want to venture far from home, attachment to these cute little life forms tends to pose a larger problem. Paying extra to have your dog locked in a cage for four hours while you fly across the country sounds awful, not to mention the fact that you're locking up your precious poodly-kins. But here's the good part: Pets, as much as we sometimes want them to be, are not children. Eugene is littered (pun intended) with cat and dog daycares and boarding kennels, so don't rule them out as a possibility. This is not to say we should ditch our pets, but rather to weigh the pros and cons of bringing them long distances to crowded vacation spots.

One of the coolest options open to Lane County dog lovers who want to leave town but don't want their beasties to languish without the benefits of the great outdoors is the Canine Campout provided by the highly certified Mandie Stuhan, owner of Lucky Dog. The campout basically involves your dog living a fun and healthy outdoor lifestyle at the coast or out hiking for a few days. They can "run on the beach, have fun and basically just chill," says Stuhan.

So take 'em or leave 'em, the choice is yours.

'we're here FOR EVERYTHING'

On call 24-7-365 at the Emergency Veterinary Hospital

by Rick Levin

I have three cats or, rather, they have me. I love my three cats. Sometimes, when I'm looking at them and that particular vulnerability of mind strikes, I involuntarily imagine one of them getting smooshed by a fast car. And when that happens, I get that pre-vomit swirl of saliva in my throat and sometimes I even almost start crying.

If you get the same feeling about your pets, I'm here to tell you something: There's good news. As you read this, there are vets at work, and they are at the disposal — 24-7, and year round — of your animals. "Since 1978," reads the web site, "the Emergency Veterinary Hospital has provided the highest-quality emergency medical care to pets and their people in the Springfield-Eugene region." This is no lie. In both locations, on Q Street in Springfield and on West 11th Avenue, I've watched these vets work and listened to them talk, and I can tell you they're saints.

I like that part, "pets and their people." Because, let me tell you, if anything even minor ever goes wrong with Nora or Mr. Smith or little Buzzy, I'll be needing as much help as the cat.

In the car on the way to my first night observing the goings-on at the Q Street Emergency Vet Hospital (E-Vet), I was freakin' terrified. I've seen some pretty unnerving things in my life — compound fractures, bone-deep cuts and way worse — but just the thought of a puppy limping through the door with a bloody paw had my insides gone to jelly. I didn't think I could take it. There's good reason original sin is exclusive to homo sapiens and our suffering is so complicated.

I admitted all this to Dr. Ingrid Kessler, co-owner and co-director of E-Vet, as well as its chief of medicine and surgery. She smiled with understanding, and proceeded — as did every vet I spoke with — to put me totally at ease. First, Dr. Kessler assured me that weekend nights, of which this did not happen to be one, are "much more likely to be consistently busy." Things indeed were quiet when I got there, with only a couple of comfortably caged cats in recovery and one white pit bull, Lola, being monitored for a post-op flare up of her spaying incision. Dr. Kessler said that earlier they'd treated a fractured pelvis. She apologized that things weren't more hectic. I told her not to worry about it.

I asked Dr. Kessler what the protocol was when an animal came in with a condition not easily diagnosed — for instance, a lethargic dog who wouldn't eat, or a cat that kept falling over sideways. "On an emergency basis of 'I need to fix it now,'" she said, "I'm going to use everything at my disposal." Dr. Kessler's "everything" amounts to the latest and best in equipment, including ultrasound, digital X-ray, oxygen support, ECG, incubators, radiology, surgery suites and an in-house laboratory. As Dr. Kessler puts it, "I have life-saving equipment, high tech stuff... No flea products."

There is no such thing as a stupid question, and at the E-Vet there is no such thing as a stupid emergency. Sometimes just the smallest clues, something slightly off, can be an indication of a potentially dire emergency. Open mouth breathing, pale gums, lethargy — these can be symptoms that something's gone awry with your pet. For instance, "dogs will eat extraordinary things," said Dr. Kessler, such as the terrier I saw a few nights later that had nibbled some sort of toxic vegetation on a hike (Lucky, thankfully, was lucky this time).

Of course, when it comes to pet care there is always an issue of cost, and the delicate balance of life-and-death considerations versus mortgaging your house on a risky surgery. "Times are tough. You have to be kind of creative sometimes," Dr. Patti Mayfield told me, pointing out that often the vets will test out an educated supposition rather than immediately running the full battery of diagnostic tests. And yet, as she explained, foremost in the vet's mind is the health and well-being of the animal and its owner, which means smart, compassion-driven care and open communication rather than automatically reaching for the most expensive solution. "If we went into this field to get rich, we're not very bright," she said.

My second night, a Saturday, I visited the E-Vet on West 11th, a location that opened just a couple years ago. On the drive there, in an ugly irony that had my stomach turning for half an hour, I watched a cat run out from behind a parked car and almost got crushed by oncoming traffic. This sort of hit-and-miss stuff seems to happen a lot on Eugene's backstreets. At least I would have known where to take the thing.

This night I met with doctors Lisa Iverson and Nanyel Hillsberry. They'd just treated and released a golden retriever that had gotten trapped under a flipped boat, fortunately while wearing a lifejacket. Dr. Hillsberry said the types and intensity of emergencies they see on weekends vary depending on the weather and other imponderables. "That's part of the fun of emergency medicine," she added. "You never know what you're going to get."

One of the things they got was a black lab named Blue, who had cancer and was scheduled for surgery later in the week but had stopped eating. Sad-eyed Blue was handled with the utmost care as the vets inserted a catheter into a vein, trying to get a steady dose of liquid sustenance pumping into the weakened animal. It was heartbreaking and heartwarming at once to see how each person in that emergency room ministered to the dog, calling him by name, talking to him gently, pacing their movements to his needs. On the surface, this couldn't have looked less like an emergency. But in reality, where pain is pain and worry hurts, this is exactly the sort of emergency that shines such a humane light on the E-Vet doctors. "We're here for everything," Dr. Kessler said. And I, for one, am glad for that.

Greenhill *Pet of the Week*

Everybody deserves a good home

So nice to meet you!! I'm Winnie, a 7 yr old female black Labrador, and I must say I'm kinda' baffled as to why I'm still at Greenhill (they take really good care of me of course, but I'm a top-notch FAMILY dog, and I'm really missing all the home-life antics)! Why I'd make a great companion: I am such a sweet old girl who loves people! My favorite activities include: hanging out by your feet, going on daily walks, and getting a treat like a yummy rawhide every once in a while. I think I'd do best in a mellow home, with older kids, and possibly no other dogs, 'cause I like calmer surroundings than in my younger days. I do have lots of energy, just not those silly puppy antics for you to deal with!

Winnie is a SNAZZY SENIOR, and her adoption fee is reduced this weekend only to $50!

All adoption fees include spay/neuter, vaccines, free vet exam, microchip, collar and id tag. Greenhill Humane Society is located at 88530 Greenhill Road, Eugene OR. To view Winnie or any other adoptable animal, go to www.green-hill.org.

Seriously, what more do you need to know than these two quite stunning facts: This week, a Beatle will be in our midst and the artist who recorded "Hit Me With Your Best Shot" and is hitting town, both of them to play at the gorgeous outdoor venue of Cuthbert Amphitheatre. Yes, the immortal Richard Starkey, better known as Ringo Starr – master of the first take, percussionist for John, George and Paul, and star of Caveman, easily the best movie of 1981 – is taking the stage Sunday, Aug. 1, with his celebrated All-Starr Band. And then, just a few days later on Wednesday, Aug. 4, original riot grrrrrrrr! Pat Benatar will glow in the setting sun with her longtime collaborator Neil Giraldo, and there is no question she will rock us like the heartbreaker, dream taker, love maker she has always been. Enough said. If you don't already have tickets, well, give it your best shot at www.thecuthbert.com or call 800-992-8499.

Very New York

Neurosis is normal in the city

PLEASE GIVE: Written and directed by Nicole Holofcener. Cinematography, Yaron Orbach. Editing, Robert Frazen. Music, Marcelo Zarvos. Starring Catherine Keener, Amanda Peet, Rebecca Hall, Oliver Platt, Ann Guilbert and Sarah Steele. Sony Pictures Classics, 2010. R. 90 minutes. ★★★★☆

In Please Give, Nicole Holofcener's follow-up to the wobbly, L.A.-set Friends With Money, the writer-director's frequent alter ego, Catherine Keener, plays Kate, a neurotic New Yorker who owns a furniture shop with her husband, Alex (Oliver Platt). They live in a lovely but not opulent apartment with their defensive 15-year-old daughter, Abby (Sarah Steele), and stock their furniture shop with vintage "pieces" left behind when people die. Alex is pragmatic about this, though the occasional customer might call him an ambulance chaser, but it gnaws at Kate, adding to her billowing, complicated guilt about money, privilege and her comfortable life in general.

The guilt is inescapable at home, where Kate and Alex have purchased the apartment next door and are, politely, waiting for its occupant, 90-something Andra (Ann Guilbert), to die. Crotchety Andra is looked after by her granddaughter Rebecca (Rebecca Hall), a radiology technician, and, more reluctantly, by Rebecca's abrasive younger sister Mary (Amanda Peet), who works in a spa. Their jobs are neatly indicative of their personalities, and gently mirror Holofcener's themes: Rebecca, practical and kind, deals with vulnerable women worried about what might hide within their own bodies; Mary, insecure and brash, pretties women's skin, a procedure some of her clients are just as certain they need.

The line between needing and wanting threads through Please Give, a quick, funny, poignant film that neither celebrates nor mocks the needs and neuroses of its characters. They're good people doing sometimes awful things; they're privileged white, straight, wealthy New Yorkers aware, to differing degrees, of what they have, even as they take it for granted. Kate's need to somehow make up for who she is and what she does leads to a series of mortifying moments, all underscored by the fact that she would probably prefer that everyone else in the world be just like her, thus sparing her the trouble of worrying about them. She wants to volunteer, but sees the happy developmentally disabled kids playing basketball as a sad thing. She wants to give to the homeless, but her judgment is deeply flawed. "Giving money is easy for me," she says, and a look that says I shouldn't have said that flashes across her face. Giving money, if you have it, is easy. Giving yourself is harder.

Kate's intentions are good but narcissistic, and Holofcener incisively gets at both sides of this divide. Other characters wrestle with similar conflicts: Alex doesn't question what he does, but falls into an affair, vaguely uncertain about what he has with Kate. Abby, who's horrified by her mother's tendency to hand $20 bills to homeless people, wants perfect skin and $200 jeans with the burning certainty that these things will make everything better — which, for a moment, they may.

Sharply written and plainly filmed, Please Give is full of intensely funny, terribly awkward small moments among friends, family and neighbors. When the film's characters sum up their philosophies in one line, it seems accidental, as if the speaker has no idea how neatly she's just defined herself. Holofcener, however, seems less interested in defining anything — a mentality, a city, a social class — than in observing the conflict between intention and action, and the difficulty of being, even briefly, the people we hope we really are.

Please Give opens Friday, July 30, at the Bijou.

Head Shaker

Salt leaves a bad taste

SALT: Directed by Phillip Noyce. Written by Kurt Wimmer. Cinematography, Robert Elswit. Music, James Newton Howard. Editing, Stuart Baird, John Gilroy and Steven Kemper. Starring Angelina Jolie, Liev Schreiber, Chiwetel Ejiofor, Daniel Olbrychski and August Diehl. Sony Pictures, 2010. PG-13. 100 minutes. ★☆☆☆☆

I should've had a notepad while watching Salt. I would've kept a running tally of every time I tried (and occasionally failed) to stifle my incredulous laughter at the bizarre, unconvincing plot unfolding onscreen. Scan the notebook page, explain the system, and my review is done — with about as much thought as went into writing this film.

But since I didn't think of this until too late, let me elaborate: Salt is a waste of many people's time, but at least a few of them were likely well-paid for their efforts. Director Phillip Noyce's shallow, insipid, dated action flick has just about two things going for it: One, Angelina Jolie kicking ass is always moderately entertaining, even if it's hard not to roll your eyes as she takes down multiple armed men with the help of some seriously jumpy editing. Two, the movie co-stars Liev Schreiber, who could probably conjure up convincing chemistry with a lamppost under the right atmospheric conditions. Schreiber is Ted Winter, a colleague of Jolie's Evelyn Salt, who is first seen in her underwear, being tortured by North Koreans. "I'm not a spy!" she moans, writhing. I was writhing, too — at the gratuitous stupidity of it all.

Salt, of course, is a spy. The supposedly big mystery — "Who is Salt?" asks the film's poster, as if it's unclear for long — is just a way to get into the film's chunky, vapid heart, in which resides a long chase sequence in which men yell "There she is!" countless times; an absurd scene involving many cop cars and a Taser; the death of a nasty Russian by broken vodka bottle; plots to assassinate at least one country's president; an impressively poorly thought-out trip down an elevator shaft; and hazy flashbacks to scenes of Salt and her bland arachnologist husband (August Diehl), all dragging behind James Newton Howard's overbearing, generic score.

Salt is the kind of movie where characters with exactly the same background have Russian accents of differing strengths to indicate how Russian — and therefore evil, because this movie is like that — they are. It ends on an overwrought conversation that had me shaking my puny fists at the screen: None of this is in question, you morons! There's an important guy in the White House who could just spell out what happened. But that would be too easy. Better to complicate something, anything; it's the best way to prep for sequels, ain't it? GW

Emotionally Raw, Musically Diverse

Beneath the smooth lyrics of Santa Cruz's Audiofauna lies a powerful, brutal honesty. Lead singer Kelly Koval's vocals have been compared to bands like Florence & the Machine and Cat Power – her voice is angsty without being whiny, heartfelt but not self-indulgent.

As these songs unravel, the synthesized beats and concerto strings uncover a graveyard of intimate fears and private wishes. Koval melts listeners with the raw clarity of her lyrics. "They say one and one is two, but where are you? Won't you find my other?" she croons in "Other Half."

Just as the lyrics drift through a sea of emotions, Audiofauna's airy melodies flit about, trying to keep up. Musically, this is a band that can't make up its mind as to what genre it wants to be: Indie? Folk? Soul? The musicians bring an expansive array of talents, playing cello, upright bass, guitar, violin and "bottles and beats," among other instruments. The energy of the band's live shows is bringing new interest to a type of music appropriately called "folktronica." But try not to rely on labels to explain such an eclectic band – just listen. Audiofauna, Leo London and Justin King play at 8 pm Thursday, Aug. 5, at Cozmic Pizza. $5. – Catherine Foss

Not Just Any Guy

The last time Eugene Weekly wrote about Guy Davis was in 2005, when he appeared to support his seventh album, Legacy. Since then, his legacy has only grown, and he's continued to work on interesting projects that showcase his curiosity about the blues and history.

Davis's album after Legacy, 2006's Skunkmello, was awarded a rare five stars by Downbeat Magazine. In 2009, Sweetheart Like You held the number one position on the folk charts for a month. Earlier this year, Davis performed on Broadway in a revival of the musical comedy production Finian's Rainbow. Whatever the project, his focus is on the blues, and the stories that intrinsically relate to the music.

Davis grew up in a middle-class suburb of New York – not the cotton-pickin' life you imagine of some bluesmen – but he's dedicated his career to reviving the traditions of acoustic blues, African American stories and his own original songs, stories and performance pieces. His parents and grandparents told him their stories of growing up in the rural south, and those made their way into his humorous monologues.

Davis taught himself the guitar, and one night on a train from Boston to New York he picked up finger picking from a nine-fingered guitar player.

On stage, Davis is folksy and humble, approaching his performances not as a formal event but rather an impromptu sitting on a front porch among friends and neighbors. By the night's end, Davis will have you singing along, clapping and stomping your feet. Guy Davis plays at 7:30 pm Thursday, Aug. 5, at Tsunami Books. $21.50 adv., $23 door. – Vanessa Salvia

It's Not Honky Punk

If you're trying to share a message that motivates people to take action, playing your music half-assed isn't going to inspire anyone to acts of disobedience, civil or otherwise. Thankfully, political folkers Alder Street Allstars know what they're doing. The four-year-old band that came into being to play a fundraiser for a friend facing deportation is so good they're a current editor's pick on CD Baby.

The musicians in the band were originally members of the Campbell Club student cooperative on campus. The All-Stars first assembled to perform a benefit concert for the sake of a friend who was going to be deported. The friend raised enough money to beat the system, and the Allstars decided not to stop. Since then, they have played numerous concerts and have recorded two albums. Their brand new one, Too Drunk To Folk, might be called "thug-grass," "punky-tonk" or folk-rock, if you want to be conventional. Each term describes a band that is fiendishly good at using banjo, mandolin, guitar, fiddle, bass and washboard to translate punk's rebellion into the bluegrass idiom.

Though Eugene has welcomed their fiery picking and plucking, the Alder Street Allstars are taking their radical visions around the country – on Aug. 3 they're embarking on a two-month cross-country tour with fellow folk rockers The Harmed Brothers in an '88 Dodge Ram nicknamed Big Bertha. "With this new album we finally feel that the band is complete, and we are constantly working on new material for a third album after our tour," says singer-guitarist Ian Royer. Alder Street Allstars play at 9:30 pm Tuesday, Aug. 3, at Oak Street Speakeasy. 21+. Free. – Vanessa Salvia

True Margrit is Truly Unique

I love the name of this band because it reminds me of my grandmother, sitting on the edge of her chocolate brown pleather sofa, surrounded by piles of TV Guide and Reader's Digest (you know how pack-ratty some grandmas are) and reading Grit magazine. Even as a kid I knew that John Wayne had True Grit, and later, I came to know that even singing cheesy lounge tunes, Ann-Margret had style like almost nobody else.

The band True Margrit has a little bit of the cool sexiness of retro toe-tapping jazz. Vocalist and pianist (wait for it) Margrit Eichler doesn't need to rely on rockstar obfuscations of distortion and reverb: With nary a guitar string in sight, her husky voice shines with only the black and white keys of a piano, a bass and a drum kit to back her up. Eichler doesn't just tickle the ivories; she occasionally slaps them too, climbing on top of the keyboard to whack them into submission. There's a little bit of hard-nosed vulnerability, just like in the movie, when Rooster Cogburn tells the young Mattie about his wife and son who never liked him anyway. Eichler's voice is flexible like

Aimee Mann's, and her ability to lay the truth bare just as powerful. Eichler's processing whatever issues she has with plucky sass. Prop me up with a piano, give me a thesaurus and a devilish wit, and I hope I would do the same. True Margrit and The New Mexican Revolution play at 9 pm Saturday, July 31, at Luckey's. 21+. $5. – Vanessa Salvia

Silken Wings

Faerieworlds is back at Pisgah

It's safe to say that a solid number of people in Eugene float a few feet off the ground. However, it's not every day that even normal people can flit their wings and revel in a whimsical, fantastic dream state. The annual Faerieworlds Festival — which has now gone viral, with more than 14 other U.S. events springing up in its wake — offers a chance for both the frequently bewinged and the faerie tourist to visit a temporary Neverland.

A defining aspect of Faerieworlds is the way the event integrates its audiences into the entertainment.

Sure, there are the international musicians, artists and exhibitors, but there's nothing quite as quizzical as the few thousand people in fairy, druid, elfin, or any fantastical garb combo imaginable.

Think the Country Fair on, oh, maybe a few more sheets of acid.

"We are constantly looking for new vendors, we are constantly looking for new artists, we get musicians from Europe, but more importantly, our guests create it," says Robert Gould, one of Faerieworlds' main producers.

Billy Scudder, an Emmy Award-winning actor, writer and MC of the festival, has been dressing up as the "Green Man" at Faerieworlds and other fairs and festivals for the past 35 years. His leafy costume looks like something out of Lord of the Rings, complete with green ivy, face paint and tights. Surprisingly, the guy's over 70. Scudder was a festivalgoer at the original Renaissance Fair in Southern California and an avid Oregon Renaissance Fairgoer. Now he's a Faerieworlds adherent.

"They were so rigid they forgot about the play," Scudder says of the L.A. Renaissance Pleasure Fair. "Like Shakespeare said, 'The play's the thing.' The story that you get the audience to follow with, that's what it's about." Like many Renaissance fairs, the ones in California tended to become relatively exclusive, nudging people aside if they were, as Scudder puts it, "having too much fun."

"Faerieworlds magnetizes people," Gould says, "versus many other shows that either philosophically or practically kick you out."

Paganism definitely plays a part in fairy-lore, but it's more of an optional deal at Faerieworlds. "The symbols that we use in the ceremonies or on our little shrines that we create, they're ultimately — you'll see the pentacle or pentacle wreaths, but that's just a really old symbol for the Earth. It's a celebration of the Earth," says

Kelly Miller-Lopez, lead singer of mythic world fusion band Woodland and also a producer of the festival.

At Faerieworlds, there's nothing wrong with being a social observer. Festival MC Scudder just asks that you try to make it a meaningful experience.

"Look into the eyes of the beholder," Scudder says. "Feel the spirit of the person who speaks to you from a place of enlightenment or a place of joy."

Some go for completely different reasons.

"I was talking to somebody today that was like, 'Dude, you have the most amazing music set, and you have the best shopping all year,'" Gould says, laughing.

But what Gould, Scudder, Kelly Miller-Lopez and her husband and fellow organizer Emilio Miller-Lopez strive for is permanence. The established culture of Faerieworlds has been recently monumentalized with the placing of a stone circle at the middle of their Buford Park venue under the full moon.

"A lot of the stone circles in England are really old, and these are stones that people have a lot of discussion about: why they're there and what purpose they serve," Gould says. "Putting these here, as those stones have a lot of history, these stones begin their history this weekend, and they'll be there, and they'll be put with intention."

Nappy Gets Happy

Jamming with a message

Kentucky MCs Nappy Roots specialize in party jams with a conscience. Though unintentional, it's interesting that the crew's fourth and latest, The Pursuit of Nappyness, employs obscure producers while using its title as a comment on Kid Cudi, an MC whose debut album's success owes more to the big-name producers backing him up than real rhyme skills. Nappy Roots, on the other hand, have passed a lot of years honing their wordsmithery, and there are plenty of examples of this on The Pursuit of Nappyness. Oddly, the band's MySpace doesn't feature any of the new album's best tracks — in fact, one of the songs offered is one of the weakest of the entire album, which suffers from inconsistent production quality. When a beat works, it works well — one of the album's best tracks, "Live and Die," features a Gothic organ and a thumping bass line — but the repetition of tracks like "Fishbowl" falls flat. Though The Pursuit of Nappyness is no Watermelon, Chicken, & Grits, the album's highlights make up for any inconsistencies. For the undecided, the crew's also got a pretty decent mixtape, Nappy University, available for free download on the band's website. EW

UO history prof's The Lakotas and the Black Hills

History's just a pile of dates, those who dislike it complain. But UO history professor Jeffrey Ostler's The Lakotas and the Black Hills: The Struggle for Sacred Ground (The Penguin Library of American Indian History; $22.95) makes a litany of 19th and 20th-century dates into a coherent, if horrifying, timeline of betrayal, land theft and obstruction of justice.

Ostler begins with the crowds of tourists at Mount Rushmore, where four white presidents smile benignly over the Black Hills. He says in his introduction, "Because historical arguments have played (and will likely continue to play) a crucial role in the struggle for the Black Hills, any history of that struggle is of more than academic interest." Indeed.

Even those of us who majored in history probably read most of this country's story from the point of view of the development of the U.S. as a nation, inexorably influenced by the idea of Manifest Destiny — not from the point of view of those whom the U.S. tried to conquer through every policy from disease-spreading to alcohol-peddling to open warfare.

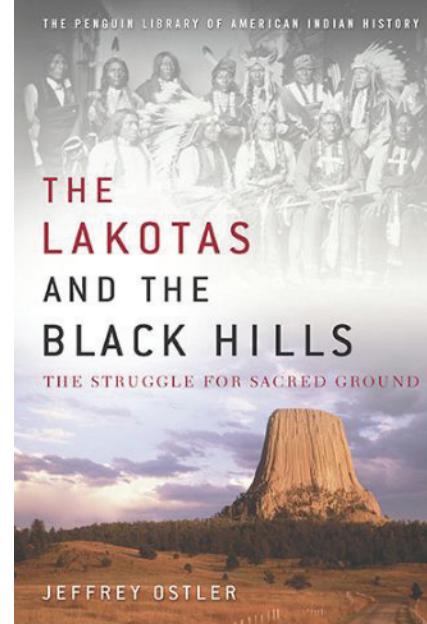

Ostler uses sources ranging from the winter counts — records of the year, items I once studied in Native art history classes, but which also provide evidence of land use, hunting, disease and warfare — to sources like Lakota storyteller James LaPointe's Legends of the Lakota, newspaper articles, oral histories, legal documents and much, much more. It's powerful and powerfully difficult to read about the number of strategies various Lakota leaders (like Red Cloud, Sitting Bull and Crazy Horse) used to attempt to deal with white peoples' encroachment.

The leaders mixed accommodation, armed resistance, refusal to agree to U.S. government terms, lobbying in D.C., lobbying in Europe, hiring lawyers who had a connection to the Lakota and other efforts designed to retain some sovereignty and gain compensation for what the Lakota lost.

What they lost is considerable, as it is with any of the more than 500 peoples living in the Americas at the time of conquest. Land, hunting rights, spiritual connection, language, healthy ways to bring up their children, sometimes the children themselves, ripped from their communities and forced into tribal schools run by white people who practiced corporal punishment. Ah yes, some people think, I know this story. Get over it, already. That was years ago.

But Ostler makes readers see that the century and a half since the worst treaty betrayal hasn't passed idly for the Lakota; they've been working to regain their lands by working through the U.S. courts ever since. Check out the government's forced use of allotments and the 1950s idea of "termination" (seriously — who the hell came up with that plan?), not to mention the 1970s obstructionist ways of the U.S. Department of Justice (hello, irony!).

In the 1980s, U.S. Senator Bill Bradbury introduced a bill to return part of the Black Hills to the Lakota peoples. That ended up failing, but guess what? The struggle's not over. Hey, strategy can include becoming educated in your oppressors' ways and gaining power under their system: I particularly appreciated a tale of a Lakota state park ranger who "discourages 'wannabes' and 'culture vultures'" (that would be those who try to appropriate First Nations religious practices) and also educates the non-Indians in the park about Lakota history.

South Dakota seems far from Oregon, no? But obviously, reading this book, in which a First Nations tribe would very much like its sacred land back, reminded me of the flooding of Celilo Falls. In the 1950s, the government put in the Dalles Dam on the Columbia. In 1957, "the Dalles Dam inundated one of the most productive Native fisheries in North America," says the Oregon Historical Society (<http://wkly.ws/p2>). Check out photos of the salmon run at Celilo Falls at <http://wkly.ws/p3>.

We're all living on Native land. Clearly, those of us with ancestors from elsewhere can't all "go back" to Asia, Europe or Africa. But we could make some reparations — of land, that is, not simply the money that a 1980 Supreme Court case offered the Lakota peoples, who refused it so that they could pursue their claim to the Black Hills.

And at the very, very, very damn least, we could read books like Ostler's, calmly written histories of how the U.S. came to be, and what the U.S. could possibly do now to deal with our contentious past and present.

Jeffrey Ostler reads from The Lakotas and the Black Hills at 6:30 pm Saturday, July 31, at Paulina Springs bookstore in Redmond.

iASK A MEXICAN!

BY GUSTAVO ARELLANO

Dear Mexican: As an old gringo who calls himself a gringo (not a gabacho), I study Mexican culture and ask myself, "Where have I seen this before?" The answer invariably is: 1950s America, that's where. Current Mexican culture in the U.S. is about 50 years behind current American culture. Back in the 1950s, Americans had large families, were overtly racist and sexist (the only jobs a woman could get were secretary or nurse). Macho men kept their women pregnant in the kitchen. There were lots of transient day workers because the Great Society social programs hadn't been implemented yet. Americans were in love with their Bel Airs and Thunderbirds. Movies were hyper-macho (both A Streetcar Named Desire and On the Waterfront came out in the 1950s). Film noir was big. Television had lots of variety shows featuring circus acts and dwarves. Soap operas started to flourish. Polka was big. There were motorcycle gangs and Mafia families. I could go on and on. The parallels are striking, ¿qué no? So, I'm guessing that the future for Mexicans means a "counter-culture" forming around 2010 that will drag Mexicans through all the crap Americans just went through the past 50 years. Scary.

- Gringo from the Future in Tucson, Ariz.

Dear Gabacho: Fascinating chrono-analysis, but what you describe are the pathologies most every immigrant group in this country faced in their dumb-ethnics phase, not just the gabacho class. And you also fail to account for the millions of pochos whose ancestors suffered such assimilatory lumps, pochos who are now essentially well-toasted whitebreads, almost indistinguishable from their gabacho neighbors save surnames and a bunch of illegal cousins. But I do salute you for being one of the few gabachos who remember the 1950s as the hellhole era it was instead on viewing it through the Vaseline-smeared lens of an MGM musical like too many Know Nothings.

I've been reading your articles for a while, and have always wondered why you respond using Spanish words and terms for which I can't find a translation. For example: que no, pendejo, raza cósmica, mariposa, chula, verga, gabachos, negritos, primeramente, migra, etc. Perhaps the translation books I'm using need to be replaced by a more complete dictionary of words. If you have a recommendation please let me know.

- Webster's Wishing We Weren't Wimps

Dear Gabacho: As I frequently mencione in this columna: pa 'educational razones, but siempre in un way that even the biggest Arpayaso can understand y thus aprender some nuevas words. If you insist on a translation book, buy iAsk a Mexican!: released in paperback form by Scribner in 2008 and available at your cheaper bargain bins everywhere.

What got the panocha name first: the sweet pudding or the sweeter vagina?

- Pablo the Pervert

Dear Wab: Neither. Panocha comes from the Vulgar Latin panucūla, which refers to the ears of cereal grain such as corn, millet, and wheat. Its literal Spanish definition is just that, and the New Mexican pudding called panocha refers to its sprouted wheat origins. This panocha also contains brown sugar, however, and panocha also became a name for this sweetener. I wish I could say that all these treats were named in homage of Mother Panocha, but I'm afraid that the word's sexual connotation is just another example of Mexican men turning everything into a sexystime opportunity. In our defense, though, other Latinos do the same: our innocent, delicious concha (the most famous of Mexican pan dulce, the one with all the rivets of sugar covering its crust) means panocha to Cubans, much to my mami's eternal dismay.

free WILL ASTROLOGY BY ROB BREZSNY

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Success coach Tom Ferry says our ability to pursue our dreams can be damaged by four addictions: 1. an addiction to what other people think of us; 2. an addiction to creating melodrama in a misguided quest for excitement; 3. an addiction to believing we're imprisoned by what happened in the past; 4. an addiction to negative thoughts that fill us with anxiety. The good news, Aries, is that in the coming weeks you will find it easier than usual to free yourself from addictions 1, 3, and 4. On the other hand, you may be extra susceptible to addiction 2. So take action to make sure you don't fall victim to it! What can you do to avoid distracting adventures and trivial brouhahas?

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some of the biggest whales feed primarily on tiny organisms like protozoa, algae and krill. They swim around with their mouths open, gulping seawater, using filtering structures in their upper jaws to sieve out the stuff they want to eat. Their strategy for getting a meal has resemblances to an approach you may benefit from using: sifting through a lot of superfluous material to get the rich basics you seek. Discernment isn't the only skill you'll need; relaxed patience will be crucial, too.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You know about World War II, but do you know about the planet's worst conflict since then? It was the Second Congo War, involving eight African nations and killing 5.4 million people between 1998 and 2006. You're painfully aware of the oil hemorrhage in the Gulf of Mexico, but have you heard about the equally horrific catastrophe that an American oil company wreaked on Ecuador from the early 1960s until 1992 (tinyurl.com/EcuadorOil)? I bring these things up, Gemini, because now is an excellent time for you to fill in gaps in your education and learn the rest of any story that you've been missing – not just concerning events in the world but also in regards to your personal history. P.S. Much of what you find, unlike the Congo War and the Ecuadorian oil disaster, may be good news.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A psychic in Colorado was arrested for bilking her clients. Nancy Marks allegedly told people that their money was possessed by nasty spirits, and that the best solution was to hand the money over to her. The cops claim she collected 290,000 of the evil dollars before she was nabbed. My message to you, Cancerian, is very different from the psychic's warning: Your bank account has a divine blessing on it. At least temporarily, this makes you a kind of cash magnet; you have an unusual power to attract legal tender. Take advantage! Say this sacred mantra: "O monkee gimme summ."

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Can you force things to grow? Is it possible to induce ripening simply by aggressively exerting your willpower? Normally I'd say no, but these days I think it's within your capacity. Don't misunderstand. I'm not saying you could go up to a tomato plant and magically transform mid-size green tomatoes into big orange beauties. But from a metaphorical perspective, you could accomplish something like that. What fragile bud would benefit from bursts of your vitality? What sweet young thing might thrive with your invigorating help?

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): In James Hillman's book The Dream and the Underworld, he says something I've heard from other researchers – that the majority of dreams we have each night are unpleasant. But that's not true for me. Way more than 50 percent of mine are educational, entertaining, and not at all bad or scary. Quite a few have jokes and riddles. Most stretch my understanding of how the world works and motivate me to get smarter about what I've been ignorant about. As you enter the Intense Dreaming Phase of your cycle, Virgo, I suspect your nocturnal adventures will resemble mine. Get ready to encounter intriguing characters who'll have the power to heal you. Talking animals may give you righteous clues about upcoming waking-life decisions. A mercurial teacher could relieve you of a delusion. The wind and rain may play music that dissolves your fear.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): During the Tang Dynasty, a golden age of Chinese culture, educated people didn't use clichéd salutations to begin and end their encounters with each other. No "Hi, how you doing?" or "See you later. Take care." Instead, they improvised creatively, composing poetic riffs appropriate for the occasion. "Your face is especially bright today. Are you expecting to see a lucky cloud?" or "I'll bask in your glories again later. In the meantime, may you find a brisk blend of elegance and mischief!" I'd love to see you do something like that, Libra. It's prime time to boost your alliances to a higher octave. Give more to your collaborators, and ask for more, too.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): I admire people who sweat freely and abundantly while they're working hard at what they love to do. Singer James Brown, "The Godfather of Soul," was renowned for his sweltering floods, and so is baseball player Pablo Sandoval. But many unfamous people I've known would also be top candidates for King and Queen of Sacred Sweat, like my friend Julia, who practices her passion in the garden, and my friend Luke, who welds giant metal sculptures. I'm hoping you will come into your own as one of this elite group, Scorpio. The omens suggest you'd be wise to raise the heat in your alchemical furnace.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The wind coming off the creek has picked up in the last half hour, and so the branches of the lemon tree outside my office window are swaying vehemently in the late afternoon sun. Is the tree upset? No. Is it worried or offended or angry at the wind? Of course not. From what I can tell, it's enjoying the raucous movement. I can even imagine that it knows how lucky it is: It wouldn't be able to dance so expressively without the help of the gusts. I hope you'll interpret your experiences in the coming week with a similar perspective, Sagittarius.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): While flying over water, an eagle can spot a fish swimming from 300 feet away. As it prowls through a winter landscape, a coyote can detect the presence of a mouse bustling beneath thick snow. I suspect you'll have a comparable knack for tuning in to things that are of keen interest, Capricorn, even if they are hidden or located at a distance. To maximize your advantage, get clear about what you're hungry for. Build a vivid image in your mind's eye of what you need.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lola, a woman I know, has mastered the art of self-contradiction. She makes no apologies for the apparent oppositions she gladly contains. For instance, she's perfectly at ease with the fact that she is not only a lesbian anarchist skater punk who's a prolific graffiti artist, but also a devout Christian who doesn't consume drugs or alcohol, drives a Lexus SUV, and volunteers as a massage therapist at a hospice. Your internal paradoxes may or may not be as extreme as hers, Aquarius, but I urge you to express them with the panache that she does.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): My friend Erica went to a Chinese herbalist, seeking help for a skin problem that hadn't been healed by six other doctors. "Very rare condition," the herbalist told her. There was only one thing he knew that would work: Erica would have to travel to the Ruorgai Marshes in Sichuan Province, China and track down a white-tailed eagle, whose fresh droppings she would gather up and apply to the affected areas of her skin. As the prospect of such a pilgrimage was daunting, Erica decided instead to simply imagine herself carrying it out. After a week of such meditations, her skin had improved. In 21 days, she wasn't completely cured, but she was much better. The moral of the story, Pisces: Simply visualizing a heroic healing quest may help fix your glitch.

Savage Love

WORDS OF PURE WISDOM by Dan Savage

Ever since hearing you say on your podcast that all men use porn, I have had a burning question: What about us women? If all men get a pass to have this whole other sex life, which is (mostly) external to their partnerships and is sexually satisfying, then I think all women should have a pass as well. Ideally, it would be a pass to enjoy something universally arousing to all women, something that would sexually satisfy us, but it wouldn't be something that turns most men on, perhaps it might even repulse them.

If there were something that met my criteria, I wonder how it would play out in our relationships? Also, I am not sure what it could be, as women are a little bit more complicated.

Desires Erotic Balance

Something women enjoy but men do not ... something erotic ... a free pass for just the ladies ... something that repulses most men ... Cupcakes?

The now-ubiquitous cupcake isn't explicitly sexual, I realize, but our culture does encourage people - women in particular - to sublimate their erotic desires by stuffing their faces with food. And most of those squat, round, and pink-frosted things look, to my jaded eyes, like so many squat little cocks, DEB, so many growers-not-showers with pink sprinkles, and most of those cupcocks are inhaled by women. So, cupcakes.

But if cupcakes don't do it for you, DEB, then how about a free pass to enjoy, eyedunno, maybe porn?

"We're actually in the middle of a porn-for-women revolution as millions - yes, millions - of women are loudly, even proudly, proclaiming their interest in porn," says Violet Blue, author, blogger, activist, and tireless foe of antiporn boneheads everywhere. If you were reading Blue's blog - www.tinybubbles.com - you would know that one out of every three consumers of internet porn are female, according to a Nielsen NetRatings report released in 2007.

"What's interesting isn't just the growing number of women using porn," says Blue, "it's that they're doing exactly what DEB suggests. It's part of their own private sex lives that are mostly external to their relationships; they're using porn as reliably as their favorite vibrators."

What women have lacked up to now is the same "free pass" men enjoy.

"Guys are encouraged to have this other sex life with porn," says Blue, "that's seen as normal and healthy. But despite the numbers, our culture is having a hard time admitting that women like porn. Antiporn feminists ignore the female viewer. The only people, besides Oprah, acknowledging the female viewer are the antiporn Christians who see it (and female masturbation) as a disease they can cure!"

Blue directs female porn consumers to Our Porn, Ourselves (www.ourpornourselves.org).

"On OPO, women are talking about liking all kinds of porn, even stuff that goes too far for some guys," says Blue. "Women are making each other feel comfortable about their newfound access to porn, openly having their desire to watch sex (and jack off to it) validated the same way that guys do."

I am a man who has been in an open marriage for 10 years. My wife dates men on her own, and I get to enjoy the occasional threesome with her and one of her partners. (We had no luck dating women or couples.) The problem is, she is clearly more interested in "her" dates than in "ours," probably because the hotter guys are more interested in her alone than in us together. My wife is GGG, but it is hard for her to persuasively feign interest in the guys who are interested in us both. I can tell she would much rather be out on one of her dates. And it is frankly depressing to watch her go through the motions with one of "ours."

Does being GGG require her to be a good actress, or does it require me to pretend that I believe her when she claims she enjoys the three-ways we have together?

Is This A Silly Problem?

This isn't a silly problem, ITASP, not at all.

Open relationships only work - closed relationships only work - when they make both people happy. You're not happy, ITASP, which means your open relationship isn't working.

Time to renegotiate terms.

Tell the wife to stop fucking other people for a while. (And, yes, you should have the authority to do that - both partners in an open relationship should be able to call a time-out.) If your wife balks, concede that there are lots of hot guys out there who want to fuck her and that you're asking her to pass up on some opportunities for hot sex. Then remind her that you're the guy she married, that you're the guy she's hoping will stick around once hot guys aren't lining up to get in her pants anymore, and that there will still be hot guys out there who want to fuck a year from now.

While you're not fucking other people, fuck each other, fuck a lot, work to reestablish your sexual connection.

Then when you're ready to start fucking other people again - and you're not ready until you're both ready - your wife should agree that over the next year she will fuck only guys who are interested in fucking you both. That's going to mean passing up on some hot guys who are only into her, of course, but that's a sacrifice she should be willing to make in order to save her marriage. It also means that she'll have to work harder to find hot guys who are into you both - do whatever you can to help - but she's likelier to make that extra effort if it's the only way she gets to fuck a hot guy who isn't her husband.

Hopefully by the time your three-way-or-the-highway year is up, ITASP, you'll have a few regular thirds on deck - hot guys who are into you both, guys your wife won't have to pretend with - and then she can do some solo adventuring without shredding your self-esteem in the process.

What is your favorite kink? What fucked-up thing does Dan Savage get up to?

Nosy Reader

My kinks aren't interesting, NR, and my marriage vows specifically forbid me from disclosing that sort of information.

Here's something interesting: "A Palestinian man has been convicted of rape after having consensual sex with a woman who had believed him to be a fellow Jew," the Guardian reported last week. After the dude "introduced himself as a Jewish bachelor seeking a serious relationship," the two "had consensual sex in a nearby building." The woman went to the cops to report that she had been raped only after she learned that the man wasn't Jewish.

Now I don't think there's anything wrong with one-night stands, or with being a slut, or with fucking the shit out of a guy you've only just met (that's how I met my husband), but I gotta say: When we have consensual sex with strangers - when we go home or to "a nearby building" with someone we've only just met - we're not just taking a chance on a person we know very little about. We're taking a chance on our own bullshit detectors. And no one's bullshit detectors are 100 percent accurate. So someone who can't bear the thought of accidentally fucking an Arab or a Republican or a married man or a guy who makes less than $250,000 a year really has no business fucking strangers. That person owes it to himself/herself to get to know people a bit better before visiting any nearby buildings with them.

Not because it's okay to lie. But because people do lie.
